So i get a letter from my faculty today, saying the very person who has continuousy harrassed me (along with others) over the last year and received a formal warning about this in June has filed a complaint against me for slander...

You don't slander a harasser, you publicly shame him. This is what I failed to do, to openly shame him.

And what universities should do to stop this violence is not conducting research on gender inequality or sexual harassment, but to actually take the necessary action. Otherwise, it is all hypocrisy. And I am personally fed up with this attitude.
